

OGeez! News With A Twist

OGeez! Summer Heats Up

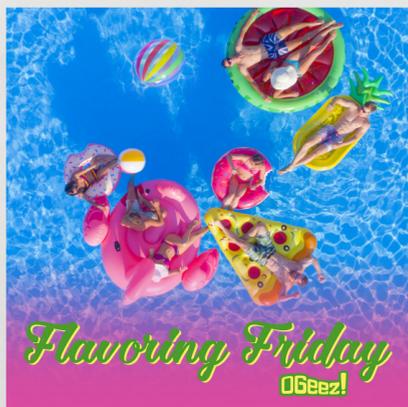

Arizona is officially renaming the season “summer” to the “Summer of OGeez!,” according to several state officials.

“We could no longer ignore the impact OGeez! is having,” said one state source, explaining the decision. “The public wants it and it’s an election year so we have to act.”

OGeez! has, indeed, been making waves. This summer it launched its Piña Colada-flavored gummy, which has been described as “beach cabana meets walk in the rain.”

Meanwhile, the Party Gods have continued to sprinkle dust on Moya Day Club. After an epic takeover of the Scottsdale venue in June, OGeez! sponsored “another mind-blowing pool party” on July 30.

The two blockbuster events are now being used as case studies at party planning universities worldwide. Guests at the first two parties were given tokens for a free bag of OGeez! Piña Colada gummies at Sol Flower and The Flower Shop, respectively. Those who attend the August 20 soirée will get tokens to Sunday Goods.

And if that weren’t enough, OGeez! is also partnering with several Arizona brands on its “Summer Essentials” box, which will hit dispensaries mid-August. The box includes a sleek Strap Photo Club Camera and a limited-edition State Forty Eight T-shirt — plus a bunch of other must-haves.

As for the Summer of OGeez!, the state source said she’s been in touch with singer James Taylor, who is re-recording “You’ve Got a Friend” with new lyrics.

“I’ve been singing the new lyrics all day: Winter, Spring, Summer of OGeez! or fall, all you gotta do is call,” said the state official. “It’s very catchy!”

New Product Alert!

OGeez! is gearing up to launch another new product. Sources told the Dispatch that OGeez! scientists have been working around-the-clock at a secret lab and that the company will release a new product on the first day of fall.

Speculation around what the new product could be has run the gamut from energy-boosting gummies to sleep-aid gummies to anti-aging gummies. The Dispatch attempted to speak to the OGeez! scientists, but they were all too tired to talk.

Oh So Good Sunday Goods

The goods have arrived and they will not disappoint. Starting last month, the esteemed dispensary Sunday Goods began selling OGeez! products.

The dispensary, which has locations in Tempe and Phoenix and is known for its sleek, state-of-the-art interiors, is selling the company’s signature Fruit and Cream gummies as well as the Minis and the Summer Piña Colada edition. Sources say the dispensary will soon be stocking OGeez’s top-selling RSO gummy, too.

Meanwhile, in late July OGeez! and Sunday Goods teamed up to give away two tickets to The Lumineers at the Gila River Arena in Glendale. These two may be unstoppable.

Judge Joint’s Case Up in Smoke?

By Marsha B. Toasted

Judge Carol Joint’s ruling in the blockbuster case, The Creams vs. The Fruits, may be going up in smoke.

The Gummyville Municipal Court judge was caught on video last month eating an OGeez! Mini. The video — which was taken at The Gavel, a Downtown Phoenix dive bar — immediately went viral.

While the world has been gobbling up the 3-milligram minis in force, legal sources say Judge Joint has a clear conflict of interest. In early June, she denied the Creams’ request for an injunction to stop OGeez! from launching the Mini in tropical, rather than in a cream.

“This is ridiculous,” said a representative for the Creams. “Judge Joint is biased and should have recused herself.”

Judge Joint denied the allegations, noting that her ruling required OGeez! to launch a cream mini within the next 18 months.

Patrons of The Gavel say the judge was playing darts — and singing Cypress Hill’s “Hits from the Bong” on karaoke. “I think she had 10 or 11 Minis throughout the night,” the bartender said.

The OGeez! ‘Chill Out’ Poll

So you take a gummy ... Now what? That’s the question we posed to our Instagram followers last month. More specifically, we asked, what are your favorite activities while gummying?

A whopping 61% of those surveyed said their favorite way to chill out on an OGeez! is by gaming. Don’t be surprised if you see a poll soon on what y’all are playing. Minecraft, Fortnite, MLB, Red Dead Redemption? We don’t know!

Meanwhile, there was a three-way tie for all the other activities, with 13% of those surveyed saying they’d either go hiking, cook or hang out poolside. We can’t blame you — pretty much anything you do on an OGeez! is better than doing it without one.

OGeez! teams up with State Forty Eight

OGeez! is partnering with the Arizona-based apparel company State Forty Eight, coming on as a sponsor for the speaker series that the company’s non-profit foundation is holding in August.

OGeez execs said they’re “excited and proud” to be OGeez sponsor dollars behind “such a socially conscious and forward-thinking brand.”

The foundation will be tapping a $25,000 fund to award grants to select entrepreneurs who attend the four-week education-and-networking event. And the speaker line-up is solid. It includes Arizona Coyotes’ in-game host J Russel along with the CEOs of the Draft Network, BackFit Health and OH Partners.

As part of the collaboration, OGeez! and State Forty Eight also teamed on the co-branded design pictured here. “We love this design and we’re thrilled to be supporting such an awesome company,” one OGeez source told the Dispatch.

Gummies On Winning Streak

Gummyville’s Major League Baseball team — the OGeez! Gummies — is having a standout season. The Gummies have won a stunning 25 games in a row, most recently sweeping the Vapes in a three-game series.

The Gummies had a rocky start to the season, but turned things around after their coach switched up their gummy diet.

“Rather than taking an RSO at 5 a.m., a Mini mid-day and then a cream or a tropical in the evening, we’re now taking them all at breakfast and adding a Piña Colada gummy,” said the team’s coach. “All it took was a tweak. We found the magic gummy combo.”

The Gummies also recently landed the 2022 rookie of the year. Baseball analysts say the move is already paying off. “This rookie has energized the team,” one ESPN commentator told the Dispatch.

“If they keep playing like this, they will not only go to the World Series, they will come home champions,” he said.

The OGeez! Gummies Stadium, which seats 250,000 people, was filled to capacity the other night. This month, the team will face off against the One Hitters and the Roaches.

True or False?

This oversized Orange Creamsicle Gummy was featured in the 1992 Blockbuster hit “Honey, I Blew Up the Kid.” When the lead character turned his son into a seven-foot-tall toddler, he also accidentally blew up his edible stash. Though he was able to revert his son to a normal toddler size, the cannabis community lobbied for him to keep, and preserve, the mega gummy for future generations. It’s now part of the Smithsonian’s permanent collection in Washington D.C.
